SIX MORE SCHOOLS GET PRIVATE FLASHING LIGHTS

School zone lights campaigner Peter Olsen today announced that privately funded flashing lights have been installed at six more schools in time for the start of the new school term.

“Flashing lights have been installed at the following schools thanks to funding by Brydens Law Group of Liverpool. See sample photos attached. All of the schools are on busy roads and urgently needed flashing lights.

- Bert Oldfield Public School, Wall Park Ave Seven Hills
- Blacktown West Public School, Lancaster St Blacktown
- St Andrews College, Breakfast Rd Marayong
- Seven Hills High / Vardys Rd Public School, Johnson Ave / Vardys Rd Seven Hills
- Smithfield West Public School, Polding St Smithfield

“I am also happy to announce the first installation of lights outside of Sydney. The Newcastle P&C Association contacted me about installing flashing lights at schools in their area. Like many other schools and P&C associations they had approached the RTA for flashing lights but had been rejected.

“The first school selected as a trial was Minmi Public School. If the lights there prove successful they will be installed at other schools in the Newcastle district.

“The rollout of private flashing lights will continue until the RTA and Government realise that the safety of our children is more important than providing RTA executives with million-dollar harbour views.

“For what the Government spent relocating the RTA to its plush new offices, flashing lights could have been installed at every school in NSW. The Roads Minister then claims: “Nothing’s more important than the safety of our kids”.

“So far this year I have single-handedly installed half as many sets of flashing lights as the RTA, thanks mainly to the generosity of Brydens Law Group.
